Calgary Honours Its Veterans

Two of Calgary's green spaces dedicated to honouring city veterans and fallen soldiers will receive much-needed facelifts, thanks to an election campaign promise and a $37 million injection of new funds.

City council approved $31.5 million to plant new trees and upgrade the lighting along the Memorial Drive parkway and on the banks of the Bow River. The trees are particularly significant: more than 3,000 poplar trees were planted there soon after World War I as a tribute to soldiers killed in the war. A sign along the parkway states: "These native trees are living memorials of men who died for your freedom."

But now the trees are dying and need to be replaced.

"I think it's appropriate that not only do we bring this area back up to its grandeur of years gone by, but re-establish that historical connection back to the fallen soldiers in the military who gave their lives for our country," said Mayor Dave Bronconnier.

The plan also commits another $6.2 million to fixing up the cenotaph and other aging war monuments that are in need of repairs in the city's downtown Central Memorial Park.

Though city council supported the move with a unanimous vote, there was a bit of controversy over the plan to fund the projects using profits from Enmax, the city-owned electricity and power utility company. The city receives dividend payments when Enmax turns a profit, and funnels some of these profits into the Enmax Legacy Parks Fund—a program introduced in 2003 to help maintain the city's green spaces.

Ward 12 Alderman Ric McIver, however, thought there should have been more public debate on where the money was to come from, given that Enmax is owned by local taxpayers. ★

Significant: Having meaning; meaningful.

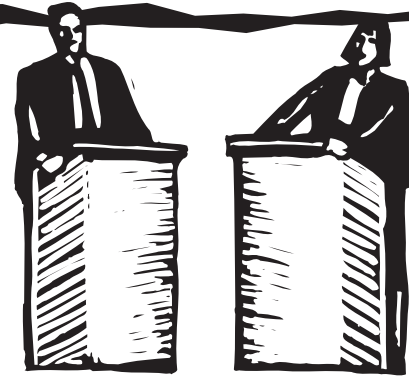

Cenotaph: A monument erected in memory of a person or persons whose remains are buried elsewhere.

Unanimous: Showing, based on, or characterized by complete agreement.

Dividend: The part of company profits paid to shareholders.

The U.S. Political Scene

With just under a year before the next U.S. national election, the American political scene is getting lively, with candidates from both major political parties jockeying to become the next president of the United States.

The current president, George W. Bush, is not a candidate. Having won previous elections in 2000 and 2004, President Bush cannot run again because of the U.S. Constitution's two-term limit for presidents. But even if he were eligible, it is unlikely Bush could win. Many are unhappy with his handling of the war in Iraq.

The first concrete evidence of public disapproval of Bush and his Republican political party occurred back in November, 2006. Till then, the Republicans had controlled both legislative arms of the government: the House of Representatives and the Senate. During mid-term elections, Americans gave the Democratic party majorities in both the House and Senate for the first time since 1994.

Hillary Clinton, wife to

The Democrats are the current favourites: in a head-to-head poll, Clinton led Giuliani by 51 percent to 45 percent among decided voters.

former president Bill Clinton, leads the race to become the Democratic candidate for president. Clinton holds 44 percent support among Democrats, well ahead of her closest competitor, Barack Obama, who has 25 percent support. If either candidate wins their party's nomination for president, they would create history — Clinton as the first-ever female nominee, and Obama as the first-ever African-American nominee.

On the Republican side, former New York mayor Rudy Giuliani leads with 28 percent among Republican voters, well ahead of his nearest rivals, Fred Thompson and Arizona Senator John McCain. The races for the presidential nominations of both parties will begin in January when the first primaries are held. In late summer Democrats and Republicans will hold party conventions at which they'll formally choose their candidates to run in the November presidential election. ★

Jockeying: To maneuver or move skillfully.
Concrete: Able to be seen and touched; real.

Legislative: Having to do with the branch of government that has the power to pass laws.

Primaries: Statewide political party elections held by the Democratic and Republican parties to help them choose their candidates for the next presidential election.

North Korea Starts Disarming Nukes

On October, 2006, the small Asian country of North Korea had successfully exploded a nuclear bomb in an underground test.

Nations around the world were concerned. North Korea is a poor nation ruled under a harsh dictatorship by Kim Jong Il—a man who is seen as unfriendly to the West. U.S. President George W. Bush has described North Korea as both a “rogue state” and a member of the “axis of evil.” Many were worried that North Korea might use such weapons against the U.S., or its longtime enemy South Korea, or even sell the technology to terrorists.

However, soon after the test, important “six-party talks” resumed. Since 2003, the governments of the U.S., China, Russia, Japan and South Korea — all with important geographic, economic and political ties to North Korea — had been negotiating with North Korea on the nuclear issue.

By February 2007, there was a breakthrough, with a disarmament agreement being reached. North Ko-

Many were worried that North Korea might use such weapons against the U.S., or its longtime enemy South Korea, or even sell the technology to terrorists.

rea agreed to shut down its nuclear reactors in exchange for one million tonnes of heavy fuel oil. As well, the U.S. and Japan, which had cut off their political and economic ties with North Korea, would normalize this relationship, with the U.S. agreeing to take North Korea off a U.S. terrorism blacklist.

There were several delays, but on November 6, the U.S. confirmed that North Korea had started to close down its nuclear reactor and two other plants key to turning nuclear fuel into weapons-grade plutonium. The deal calls on North Korea to shut these plants down by the end of the year and account for all its nuclear weapons material and programs (including an estimated 50 kg of plutonium that it has probably already made, a quantity enough for six to eight bombs). The steps being taken will ensure that it would take at least a year before North Korea could start the plants up again. ★

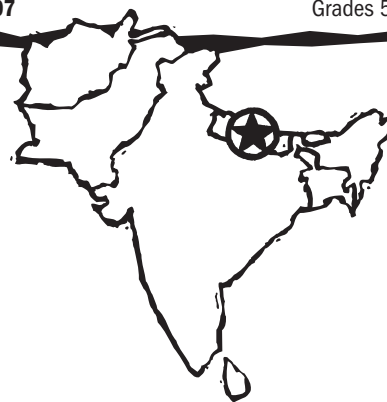

Dictatorship: Someone who had complete control of a country, often ruling it unjustly.

Resume: To start doing something again.

Plutonium: A radioactive material essential for making nuclear bombs. It is virtually nonexistent in nature; it is created in a nuclear power plant by bombarding uranium with neutrons.

The Dalai Lama Visits Canada

He has a kind face, a gentle smile, and is a Buddhist monk. He is known for his message of compassion and love. You might not suspect that he is also a figure of controversy — considered by the Chinese government as a separatist and a dangerous political figure. During the Dalai Lama's recent visit to Canada as part of his world tour, both images — kind teacher and controversial personality — were front and centre.

The Dalai Lama, more properly known as Tenzin Gyatso, the 14th Dalai Lama, is visiting to give a series of sold-out public talks on "The Art of Happiness." This is the title of his bestselling book on living harmoniously according to Buddhist principles. He was also invited to meet with Prime Minister Stephen Harper, an event that stirred up anger among Chinese government officials.

The 72-year-old Dalai Lama is the spiritual leader of Tibet, a mountainous region at the western edge of China. He fled his homeland in 1959 after a failed uprising against Chinese rule, and has since lived in exile. China is angry over the fact that Harper met with the Dalai Lama for 40 minutes in the office of the prime minister. The Chinese government perceives that as giving official, governmental support for the idea of a separate and independent Tibet. Three years earlier, former Prime Minister Paul Martin avoided similar controversy by meeting the Dalai Lama in a less official setting — the home of Ottawa's Roman Catholic Archbishop.

Chinese officials warned that Canada-China relations may suffer. Jason Kenney, Canadian secretary of state for multiculturalism, responded that it was appropriate for the prime minister to meet with

Tibet and China: A Brief History

In the 1700s, China's Qing Emperor incorporated Tibet into China and installed the Dalai Lama as the region's spiritual and political leader. Tibet remained part of China until 1913, when World War I and the subsequent Chinese Civil War caused China to lose interest in the remote region, which then began ruling itself. After 1949, the Chinese communist army came to Tibet and has asserted its rule ever since. Some Tibetans have accused the current Chinese government of human rights abuses. China denies these allegations, instead pointing out that it has helped dramatically improve Tibet's economic, health, and education systems. ★

Separatist: One who favours the separation of one part of the country from another to form two separate countries.

Buddhist: Believer in a world religion/philosophy based on the spiritual teachings of Siddhartha Gautama Buddha. A major religion in central and eastern Asia.

Exile: To send someone away from his or her own country and order the person not to return.

Perceive: To become aware.

Oil Discovery Could Transform Brazil

Brazil is a large South American nation known for its great Amazon rainforest, its international soccer pro prowess, and soon, perhaps, its oil.

The government-run oil company Petroleo Brasileiro SA (or Petrobras for short) has announced that it has found a huge new oil reserve, located underwater — 280 km off the coast of Rio de Janeiro in the Pacific Ocean. Based on some initial test wells drilled in the area known as the Tupi Field, Petrobras believes that there could be as much as eight billion barrels of oil located in the area.

The find represents a potentially whopping 55 percent increase in the country's oil reserves, and would equal 40 percent of all the oil ever discovered in Brazil. Historically Brazil has had to import oil, even going into debt in the 1970s and 80s buying foreign oil. The new find could transform the nation, which is a minor oil exporter, into a major oil powerhouse as the world's eighth largest oil producer.

In recent years, Brazil's

economy has been one of the better ones in Latin America, based primarily on agriculture, mining and manufacturing. Adding major oil exports to the mix could turn Brazil into a world economic power and help elevate standards of living in the region.

Of course, Brazil still has to be able to get the oil out of the ground, which will not be easy. The Tupi oil field lies out in the ocean, under 2,140 metres of water, a 3,000-metre layer of rocks and sand, and a 2,000-metre layer of salt. Petrobras is the right company to try: it is regarded as a global leader in this kind of ultra-deep offshore oil drilling.

The top five nations in the world for proven oil reserves are:

1. Saudi Arabia: 264 billion barrels
2. Canada: 179 billion barrels
3. Iran: 132 billion barrels
4. Iraq: 115 billion barrels
5. Kuwait: 101 billion barrels

The United States ranks 11th, with 21 billion barrels of oil reserves. Over 95 percent of Canada's reserves are in the oil sands. Based on 2004 figures, the world consumes about 83 million barrels of oil a day, equal to 30 billion barrels a year. ★

Prowess: Skill, success.

Oil Reserves: Oil that has been discovered and is still in the ground, and which can be extracted at an economically realistic cost.

Whopping: Very large, remarkable.

Making It Into the Hall of Fame

Have you ever received an award for something special you did? Maybe you got a ribbon or trophy for winning a sports event or a certificate for getting high marks in your classes. Receiving a tribute can be very exciting for anyone, even for sports stars. On November 12th, five Canadian hockey players received a special acknowledgment for achievements in their sport. Achieving high scores throughout their careers, showing an ability to stop the other team from scoring, and other skills have made Mark Messier, Ron Francis, Al MacInnes, Scott Stephens, and Jim Gregory special enough to become the newest Canadian members of the Hockey Hall of Fame.

The Hockey Hall of Fame has been identifying the best hockey players in North America for years. It opened at Exhibition Place in Toronto on August 26, 1961, and in 1992 it moved to a former bank building in downtown Toronto. The displays inside the Hall include jerseys, sticks, pucks, and information about the game. The Stanley

The International Hockey Hall of Fame and Museum is the oldest of its kind. It has been in Kingston, Ontario since 1947. Players have to be retired for three years before they can become part of the Hall of Fame.

Cup, Canada's highest hockey award, also has a place of honour. But for many people stories of the players who have been inducted into the Hall of Fame are the main attraction.

The most recent inductees' hockey careers were outstanding. Mark Messier won several awards and was the second highest-scoring player in the league after Wayne Gretzky. Ron Francis had a very high goal record and received awards for being a very polite and gentlemanly player. Al MacInnes was known for his hard slap shots and defending his side from goals. Scott Stevens was skilled at defending the net and was known for his body checks of other players. Jim Gregory worked as a general manager and a director of hockey teams and camps. ★

Tribute: Something given or done to express the giver's esteem.

Inducted: To admit or bring in as a member; initiate.

Gentlemanly: Like, characteristic of, or befitting a gentleman; well-mannered.
